課程宗旨： Course Objectives	The overarching purpose of this course is to both hone students' global English speaking and presentation proficiency skills and, simultaneously, address their immediate and future idiosyncratic specific workplace linguistic needs. Taught in adherence to strict PBL pedagogical principles in which students embrace multimodal identities while engaging actively in various individual and group tasks, this course is divided into the following three modularized themes: First, assisting students' explorations of their future career inclinations and systematically brainstorming, organizing and activating ideas, constructs and concepts; second, introducing students to a number of practical public-speaking instructional presentation theories, as well as the requisite skills and techniques necessary to execute them; and, third, co-creating simulated future workplace English professional public speaking scenarios via the deliverance of customized speeches, interactive presentations and other activities that tailor to students' projected future needs.
