課程宗旨： Course Objectives	Research and development (R&D), the development and application of new scientific and engineering knowledge, has already become one of the most important corporate functions which accounted for a significant proportion of a firm's budget since new products and processes and enhance firms' competitive advantages. Modern R&D of products or processes usually involves huge resources so as to maximize performance with the minimum cost and time. To achieve the above-mentioned goals, R&D projects shall be managed appropriately. Therefore, what is R&D, how the new products should be designed and developed and how the R&D projects should be managed so as to achieve the best R&D and product/process performance with the lowest cost and time should be the essential skills for future managers of technology. Thus, the concepts of R&D, R&D management, new product design and development as well as project management and R&D project management will be introduced in the course for serving as a background for students' future R&D management related jobs in the high technology industry.
